Conditions for course completion: 1. The study of specialist literature 2. Active participation in colloquia. 3. Elaboration of a case study (application of theoretical and methodological procedures.
Learning outcomes: Acquired discursive - literary-scientific thinking and methodological incentives from critical and analytical reading of literary-scientific metatexts will provide the students with an orientation in a pluralistic methodology of research and in theoretical conceptions of contemporary literary science (formal and structural analysis, hermeneutical reading, semiotic view on the qualities of the literary text, procedures of cognitive sciences, the concept of constructivism among them). The students will use acquired theoretical and methodological competences in their own research: from the reflection of the text and analytical and interpretational acts to comparison to confrontation of opinions in the process of verification or questioning of fixed theorems.
Brief outline of the course: The intention is to strengthen exactitude in literary-scientific research of young researchers. The starting point is genesis of scientific thinking in (Slovak and world) literature from (pre)positivism, formal school, structuralism, and phenomenology to semiotics and postmodern conception of open work. A supplement to a discursive line are possibilities of cognitive literary science and radical constructivism, issues of textology, narratology or revitalised tradition of comparative literature and hermeneutics. Textological application of theorems is individual, and adapted to the topic of the student's dissertation thesis.
