COURSE INFORMATION LETTER

University: P. J. Šafárik University in Košice
Faculty: Faculty of Law
Course ID: KUPaSP/C/SS/22	Course name: Administrative justice
Course type, scope and the method: Course type: Seminar Recommended course-load (hours): Per week: Per study period: 6s Course method: distance, present
Number of ECTS credits: 2
Recommended semester/trimester of the course: 2.
Course level: III.
Prerequisites:
Conditions for course completion: Activity during the studies, demonstration of knowledge, including the ability to apply and interpret relevant court decisions in the administrative justice system concerning the differences between administrative and criminal offences as well as the interrelationship of proceedings on them in substantive and procedural law, knowledge of its application and interpretation.
Learning outcomes: The content of the course is mainly the scientific investigation of the nature and impact of relevant court decisions in the administrative justice system concerning the relationship between administrative and criminal offences, as well as the interrelation of proceedings in substantive and procedural law. By passing the course, the student acquires the skill to apply an analytical, synthetic, and comparative approach to the perception of the essential elements of the delimitation of administrative and criminal offences through the related case law of administrative courts in order to acquire advanced knowledge of the legal discipline related to criminal law (administrative law) in the related problematic (administrative law of sanctions). Primarily, the student will become familiar with the scientific examination of the legal regulation and decision-making practice concerning administrative sentencing actions with potential subsequent impact on criminal proceedings in the event of a reclassification of an act to a criminal offence and vice versa. The teaching includes identification, examination of the causes and legal solutions to the legal-applicational deficiencies in the application of the right of defence in proceedings concerning an administrative offence, with particular emphasis on block proceedings as a type of summary offence proceedings, followed by a scientific examination of the legal position of a person injured by an administrative offence and a person injured by a criminal offence, with comparative conclusions leading to de lege ferenda proposals, the gradual establishment of a scientific examination of the criminal and administrative law aspects of the right of a witness under the age of 18 to refuse to testify, and finally, the knowledge and scientific approach to legal reasoning in the application of criminal law analogy in administrative offence proceedings under the Code on Administrative Trial Proceedings in the context of the administrative courts case-law.
Brief outline of the course:

Scientific examination of the nature and impact of relevant case law in the administrative justice system concerning the connections between administrative and criminal offences as well as the interrelationship of the proceedings thereon in the light of substantive and procedural law.

Clarification of the analytical, synthetic, and comparative approach to the perception of the essential connections regarding the delimitation of administrative and criminal offences through the related administrative courts case law.

A scientific examination of the law and decision-making practice of judicial proceedings on administrative sentencing actions with potential subsequent impact on criminal proceedings in the eventual reclassification of an act to a criminal offence and vice versa.

Identification, examination of the causes, and legal solutions to the legal-applicational deficiencies in the application of the right of defence in administrative offence proceedings, with particular emphasis on block proceedings as a type of summary administrative offence proceedings.

Scientific examination of the legal status of a person injured by an administrative offence and a person injured by a criminal offence with comparative conclusions leading to de lege ferenda proposals.

A scientific examination of the criminal and administrative law aspects of the right of a witness under the age of 18 to refuse to give evidence.

Understanding and scientific approach to the legal argumentation in the application of criminal law analogy in the proceedings on administrative offences under the Code of Administrative Trials Proceedings in the context of administrative courts' case law.

Course ID: KDŠaP/B/UPVCR/22	Course name: Constitutional and Legal Development of the Czechoslovak Republic
Course type, scope and the method: Course type: Seminar Recommended course-load (hours): Per week: Per study period: 8s Course method: distance, present
Number of ECTS credits: 3
Recommended semester/trimester of the course: 2.
Course level: III.
Prerequisites:
Conditions for course completion: Active participation in individual seminars. The knowledge concerning the discussed issues acquired by the PhD students will be tested at the final meeting of the course.
Learning outcomes: The emergence of Czechoslovakia from the ruins of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy was a turning point in the constitutional history of Central Europe. Although the constitutional law of the new state is based on Austrian and partially on Hungarian foundations, it differs from them in many respects and prefers other, Western European models. To this day, the constitutional law concept of the so-called First Czechoslovak Republic is considered to be the basis for the constitutional development of Czechoslovakia and later Slovakia as an independent state. Some of its elements are also applied today in the constitutional law of the Slovak Republic. By passing the compulsory elective course, PhD students get the opportunity to understand the link between the past and the present. First of all, they will understand the very difficult and complex creation process of the new state, which was shaped primarily by the determination of the new state borders. This issue still sometimes provokes international disputes, especially with radical politicians across our southern border. In 1918, the foundations of the Czechoslovak, and later Slovak, constitutional system were laid. The development of the individual constitutions in our territory does not, of course, end with the establishment of the wartime Slovak state; it continues to this day, a dynamic process that is gradually experiencing change. Awareness of its foundations will enable the PhD graduate to formulate de lege ferenda proposals that he will be able to apply in his future legal practice.
Brief outline of the course: 1. Establishment of the Czechoslovak Republic. Reception norm. Dualism of law. Hungarian and Austrian sources of law. 2. Formation of the borders of Czechoslovakia. The Versailles Peace Conference and the activities of the Czechoslovak delegation. Versailles peace treaty system. Shaping the Republic's borders in the interwar period. 3. Constitutional law of interwar Czechoslovakia. The constitutional nature of the reception norm. Provisional constitution. The constitutional charter and the laws associated with it. The Second Republic and its constitutional foundations. Further development of the constitutional system on the territory of Czechoslovakia. 4. Local administration and self-government in the interwar period. County law. Regional Acts. Concepts and tendencies of the development of public administration after the Second World War.

Faculty: Faculty of Law
Course ID: KDŠaP/B/VKSaKP/22	Course name: Major codifications of private and canonical law
Course type, scope and the method: Course type: Seminar Recommended course-load (hours): Per week: Per study period: 8s Course method: distance, present
Number of ECTS credits: 3
Recommended semester/trimester of the course: 1.
Course level: III.
Prerequisites:
Conditions for course completion: Active participation in individual seminars. The knowledge acquired from the seminars as well as from the self-study of the PhD students will be verified at the final meeting of the course.
Learning outcomes: Without knowing history, we can hardly understand the present. The very notion of 'codification' can be found in ancient Babylonian law - in connection with perhaps the most famous archaic legal compendium, the Code of Hammurabi. By passing the compulsory elective course, PhD students will be able to understand in more detail the different periods of preparation and implementation of a comprehensive regulation of civil law in particular, with emphasis on the historical development and interrelations of the need for private law codification in European countries in the 19th and early 20th centuries, not forgetting the codification work on the adopted codes of canon law 1917;1983, which, however, were based on completely different theological-legal premises. PhD students will get acquainted not only with the theoretical knowledge of the normative regulation of selected legal institutes, but also with the current regulation of these institutes in the Civil Code of the Slovak Republic and the forthcoming recodification based on the so-called monistic theory. Awareness of the interrelations in the historical development of the foundations for the creation of modern codifications of private law in Europe (ABGB, BGB, ZGB), which also served as legal models for other European countries, but also the adoption of the basic norms of canon law (CIC 1917; CIC 1983) is a necessary prerequisite for the acquisition of specific knowledge and the required abilities of a PhD graduate, referring also to the title of the graduate of the Faculty of Law itself - iuris utriusque doctor.
Brief outline of the course: 1. Historical-legal foundations and legal-theoretical basis for the implementation of the modern codification of private law in Europe. 2. The Austrian General Civil Code (ABGB) and the German Civil Code (BGB) - common features and differences in the regulation of selected legal institutes. 3. Code of Canon Law 1917 - background and principles of its adoption. Its interaction with domestic law of the Czechoslovak Republic after 1918 and after the adoption of the Constitutional Charter of the Czechoslovak Republic No. 121/1920 Coll.

4. Code of Canon Law 1983. The policy of "aggiornamento" at the Second Vatican Council (1962-65). Legal comparison with the Code of Canons of the Eastern Churches (CCEO 1990).

COURSE INFORMATION LETTER

University: P. J. Šafárik University in Košice
Faculty: Faculty of Law
Course ID: KDŠaP/B/RPPpIISV/22	Course name: Recodification of the legal system after the Second World War (Legal Biannual)
Course type, scope and the method: Course type: Seminar Recommended course-load (hours): Per week: Per study period: 8s Course method: distance, present
Number of ECTS credits: 3
Recommended semester/trimester of the course: 3.
Course level: III.
Prerequisites:
Conditions for course completion: Active participation in individual seminars. The acquired knowledge from the seminars as well as from self-study of the PhD students will be verified at the final meeting of the course.
Learning outcomes: After the establishment of the Czechoslovak Republic in 1918, a state of legal dualism was in force, inter alia, in civil and criminal law. The concept of Czechoslovak law in the interwar period of 1918-1938 was based on the former Hungarian and Austrian law. One of the main objectives of the unitary state in the field of law was to overcome legal dualism and to adopt new, common codes. These processes were only completed in the post-World War II period - when the state of legal dualism was overcome. Civil and criminal law were unified/recodified in the framework of the legal biannual ongoing at the time. Passing of the elective course will enable PhD students to gain a deeper understanding of the process of unification of the legal order of the Czechoslovak Republic. PhD students will become acquainted not only with the theoretical knowledge of the preparation and course of unification work that resulted in the adoption of the new codes of civil and criminal law, but also with the development of criminal and civil law jurisprudence. Being acquainted with the historical context of the development of the basic branches of the legal order is also a prerequisite for the acquisition of specific skills of a PhD graduate.
Brief outline of the course: 1. The establishment of the Czechoslovak Republic and the state of legal dualism. Former Hungarian and Austrian sources of law. Czechoslovak civil and criminal law. 2. The legal order of the Czechoslovak Republic after World War II. Recodification of law. The biannual law school - its aims, course and results. 3. Criminal law of the Czechoslovak Republic after World War II. Unification of criminal law. Adoption of the Criminal Act No. 86/1950 Coll. and Act No. 87/1950 Coll. on criminal court proceedings. Ideological foundations of Czechoslovak criminal law and new criminal law codes. 4. Civil law of the Czechoslovak Republic after World War II. Unification of civil law. Ideological foundations and concepts of the new codes. Civil Code No. 141/1950 Coll. and the Civil Procedure Code No. 142/1950 Coll.
